China official meets Zia

ISLAMABAD, Jan. 21 (R) Chinese Vice-Premier Li Histon-nien held talks Sunday with Pakistan President Zia ul-Haq which were believed to have centered on the pro-Soviet government neighboring Afghanistan

Li arrived Saturday night from Zaire on a three-day visit apparently aimed at reessuring Pakistan of Chinese support,

Pakistan is concerned about Soviet encroachment in Afghanistan since the pro-Communist coun in Kabul eight months ago which it feels could threaten security along their common frontier.

China, Pakistan's neighbor to the north, is thought likely to be worried by the possibility of its influence here being eroded by the Soviet Union.

Li was also expected to reassure Pakistan that forthcoming normalization talks with India would not affect their relations.

Pakistan has a traditional fear of being squeezed between Afghanistan and India, with which it is in dispute over Kashmir, and of having to fight two border wars the same time.

Carter to release budget; Moscow assails priorities

(Agencies) - President Carter will send to Congress Monday a 1980 budget bigger than any of its predecessors but billed as an answer to inflation.

The budget would increase military spending in line with Carter's commitment to America's NATO allies and worry about growing Soviet strength.

But it would cut back on social welfare funds as part of his bid to counter inflation, which the president calls the real enemy of Americans with low or fixed incomes.

Government officials said the budget would call for federal government expenditures totalling just over $530 billion compared with $493.4 billion in

The budget is subject to congressional approval and the plans for welfare cuts have already drawn strong opposition from liberals, blacks and oldare pensioners who believe that poor Americans will be hurt by the economies

The budget has also drawn an attack from the Soviet news agency Tass. Ignoring the protests of the American public, Carter is cutting funds for badly needed social programs in his 1980 federal budget in order to raise military expenditures, Tass charged on Saturday.

The civilians disembarked from a fleet of 40 boats that sailed into the danger zone of an area slated for four-nation warship maneuvers.

Fishermen reported by radio that they successfully planted a banner claiming "our island," but they were warned by two naval officers that the landing zone was filled with dangerous, unexploded shells and bombs from target practice.

The news agency noted that Carter described the budget as "austere and stringent" and emphasized that "it will disappoint those Americans who are pressing for an increase in federal expenditure on domesic programs."

Tass said Carter justified the extraordinary limitations on government spending by the necessity to combat inflation. which during 1978 reached a rate of 9 per cent, as well as to reduce and ultimately eliminate chronic budget deficits.

Carter will follow up the unveiling of his budget by delivering on Tuesday his annual State of the Union address, dealing with domestic and foreign policy.

Under the new budget, defense spending was expected to increase by about 10 per cent to $123 billion because of what the administration calls rising Soviet strength in long-range nuclear missiles and conventional arms.

The extra defense outlay would make allowance for an estimated seven per cent inflation rate in the coming fiscal year, ending on Sept. 30, 1980. It would thus redeem a pledge by Carter to NATO allies that he would boost military expen-

(Agencies) — The United States and its major Western allies are reportedly considering devetopment of a nuclear missile to be stationed in Europe within range of the Soviet.

But U.S. officials declined comment on the report, in Saturday's "New York Times" which said development of the missile was being considered by the United States, Britain, France and West Germany. The newspaper said the misside was discussed at the sum-

Angola accepts request to discuss Chinese ties

LONDON, Jan. 21 (R) — Angola announced Saturday night it had accepted a request from China for a meeting to discuss the establishment of diplomatic relations, the . cficial news agency Angop said.

It quoted a communique issued by Angola's top ruling body, the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA). China supported the rival National Front for the Liberation of Angola (FNLA) which lost the post-independence war against the Cuban and Russianbacked MPLA.

But after meetings between Angolan President Agostinho Nelo and Zaire head of state Mobutu Sese Seko last year FNLA operations from Zaire bases ceased and many FNLA supporters have returned to Angola under a presidential amnesty. Angop said the . Political Bureau gave no indication of when or where the first contacts with China would take place. China played only a token role in the Angolan Civil War which erupted before independence in November 1975, supplying some arms and training to FNLA guerritias

The main backing for the FNLA came from the United States, which supplied arms to Zaire for the FNLA guerrillas based there.

China sided with the FNLA to help counterbalance Soviet backing for the MPLA.

NEW OPPORTUNITY

The current meeting of the Palestine National Council in Damascus may turn out to be the most important session the parliament-in-exile has ever held. Crucial decisions need to be made at the meeting — decisions that could have a decisive impact on the fragile Middle East peace process and the chances for the eventual creation of a Palestinian state. The key to the success of the conference will be the ability of the various Palestinian groups to overcome their differences and forge a realistic joint strategy for the Palestinians that will enable them to play a role in the determination of their own future. Palestinians have long been bitter about the fact that they have had no voice in decisions affecting their lives, their destiny and their national rights. Given the course of recent events in the region, the Palestinian people may now have an unprecedented opportunity to become a major actor in the Middle East peace process, with the blessings of both the United States and the Soviet Union. The political strategy being mapped out in Damascus could enable the Palestinians to seize that opportunity, and effect a major change in the Middle East peace process.

There are clear indications from Washington that the Carter administration is anxious to find a mutually satisfactory Sormula for initiating an open dialogue with the PLO. Earlier American insistence, (born of Israeli pressure) that the Palestinian resistance movement make major changes in the national charter has given way to a softer U.S. stand, which calls on the PLO to accept the principles of U.N. Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338. The Carter administration pas already opened a secret dialogue with PLO officials. through congressional and other intermediaries. It now wants to formalize that dialogue, but because of domestic pressures. prchestrated by the Israeli lobby, the administration needs a gioncrete gesture from the Palestinians to justify open contacts. that gesture could come from the Palestine National Council cession in Damascus.

One development that could thrust the Palestinians into the forefront of the Middle East peace process would be the creation of a provisional government-in-exile, a formal body which would include leaders from all major segments of the salestinian political spectrum. Such a provisional government realism and responsibility, and would provide a perfect vehicle abould be viewed by most countries as a sign of Palestinian for Palestinian participation in comprehensive peace negotiations. Another alternative for the PNC would be a decision to allow a specific Arab country — Jordan is most often mentioned in this regard - to speak for the Palestinians in future negotiations. This alternative is perhaps less desirable than the government-in-exile concept, since it theoretically limits direct Palestinian participation in the determination of their own future, but if the Arab country in question were prepared to reflect Palestinian views frankly and directly, without substantial modification, such "mediation" might prove fruitful.

Whatever decisions result from the National Council meeting, it is to be hoped that the Palestinian leadership does not turn its back totally on a peaceful solution to the conflict. Certainly we can expect heated debates over strategy and tactics, but given the current climate of Palestinian opinion, there is much to be said for active Palestinian involvement in the peace process - if only to demonstrate to the Americans the bankruptcy of current Israeli policy. If the Palestinians finally decide to call Israel's bluff and challenge the Jewish state to accept a comprehensive and just peace, the worse that can happen is that we will all end up back where we started - but this time with the United States in our corner. The international momentum is in the Palestinians' favor. They should capitalize on it, before the opportunity is lost forever.

The unity of Canada

By Stanley Meisler QUEBEC-

The provincial government of Quebec and the federal government of Canada are battling each other these days in a war of statistics , graphs and economic jargon. At stake is the unity of Canada. Federal officials are trying to persuade the voters of Quebec that independence, or anything like it, would bring on economic disaster.

Provincial officials insist that the Quebecers can have both independence and economic good times. In fact, the provincial officials say, Quebec ly by the Canadian federal sys-

These countering arguments underline what is probably the most important issue in the impending Quebec referendum. No date has been fixed, but Premier Rene Levesque has announced that within 18 months he will ask the voters of Quebec to approve what he calls "sovereignty association." If the voters agree, Levesque says he will negotiate with Canada for a sovereign Quebec retaining most of its economic ties with the federation. Some analysts believe the economic arguments cancel each other.

"There is enough truth on both sides to make it difficult for the referendum to be fought on the economic issue," said Claude Forget, a Liberal Party member of the provincial legislature (now officially the "National Assembly"). "People don't know which side is right. It's a game for the experts."

Nevertheless, both sides are spewing forth economic ports at a rate making it clear Without the tariffs to keep out that both look on the issue as vital Levesque has underscored the significance of the issue by setting sovereignty association, not just sovereignty, as his goal. This amounts to an admission by Levesque that Quebecers would reject independence untess they were given assurances against economic disruption.

A few basic lines of argument have emerged from the maze of reports. In general, the federal government of Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau attempts to prove that Quebec needs Canada more than Canada needs Quebec. Therefore, according this argument, it would be pointless for Canada to continue in economic association with a sovereign Quebec. Canada would have little or nothing to gain from it.

Premier Levesque and his Quebecois advance two almost contradictory arguments. They for more than two centuries by British and Canadian economic policies. Despite this, necessary and assures Quebeinto keeping its economic association with a sovereign Que-

This is true of other industries. The federal studies say. that the products of Quebec receive more tariff protection than the products of other provinces. For this reason, the federal government says, other provinces would probably reject economic association with a sovereign Quebec.

"The real choice facing Quebec," one report concludes, "appears to be outright separatism or participation in тепеwed federalism."

Optimistic Arab-Americans

By Bob Lebling Washington Bureau WASHINGTON -

Leaders of the Arab-American community, just back from a trip to the Arab world, have concluded that the growing Arab political consensus in the wake of the Camp David talks "holds great hope for Middle East peace" — provided the Carter administration responds positively to it

A leadership delegation from the National Association of Arab Americans (NAAA), which visited eight Arab countries last month and held meetings with a number of Arab heads of state, has presented a report on its trip to the administration and key lawmakers on Capitol Hill

The delegation, headed by NAAA President Dr. Hisham Sharabi, said the Arab leaders "were eager to have their perspective understood in Washington" and welcomed the Arab-American leaders as unofficial intermediaties with the Carter administration.

Sharabi and his delegation met with Jordan's King Hussein, Syrian President Hafez Assad, Lebanon's President Elias Sarkis, Saudi Arabia's King Khaled and the rulers of Bahrain and Oatar.

The Arab-American leaders also met with PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and other members of the PLO's Executive Committee.

As a result of its talks, the group concluded that the "widespread criticism" of the Camp David initiative in the Arab world "is evolving into a political consensus that holds great hope for Middle East the delegation said, is "Arab willingness to make peace with Israel, but not on the basis of the Camp David documents in their current form." What the Arab world seeks is "a formula for resolution of the Palestine issue that would include Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories, Palestinian self-determination, and provision for refugee rights in exchange for acceptance of Israel." A contributing factor in the new Arab consensus is the recent reconciliation of Syria and Iraq, which "has the potential for effecting a major swing in Arab political and economic power, the delegation said. The group described last autumn's Arab summit in Baghdad as "an extraordinary event that saw Arab countries with varying philosophies be-ginning to develop a unified perspective on major political issues. Another factor contributing to the Arab consensus has been the political crisis in Iran. which has "provided a powerful stimulus to conservative Arab states to join their Arab brothers." These countries, including the major Arab oil states, "are deeply concerned about politicai destabilization and Soviet influence in the region and view political solidarity with other Arabs as essential to their own security," the NAAA team said. The group also noted that King Hussein has taken on a new, enhanced role in the Arab world, following the Camp David summit.

The Jordanian monarch "was shocked by the lack of consuitation with him over the future of the West Bank, delegation said, and was "engered by the inadequacy of the Camp David document and by administration pressure on him to accede to it." Husseln's stature as an Arab leather was enhanced at the Baghdad conference, when fordan and the PLO were named joint managers of a sizable

Arab development fund for the West Bank and Gaza Strip, the group noted. The NAAA delegates expect King Hussein to speak for the new Arab consensus should he make an expected visit to Washington early this year. In its recommendations, the NAAA team urged President Carter to respond positively to the Arab political consensus, which it said "holds the possibility of widespread Arab participation in the peace process on terms that the rest of the world has already accepted as fair to all sides."

The group said it believed the American people and Congress would support the president in any moves that would ensure Israeli security but at the same time "require abandonment of its 1967 conquests."

The NAAA delegation saw a forthcoming U.S. visit of King Hussein as "the logical starting point" for a new initiative by the Carter administration.

"The administration should make every effort to indicate the seriousness with which it regards the views (King Hussein) will be expressing not only on behalf of Jordan but for the first time also on behalf of the Syrians, the Palestinians, and most of the rest of the Arab world." the NAAA mid.

Current views and policies of the PFLP

DAMASCUS-A dramatic September, 1970. photograph of a bijacked jetliner exploding in the Jordanian desert adorns a wait in the Beirux headquarters of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

The picture is symbolic for Dr. George ilabash lit represents the apex of the PFLP's airline hijacking campaign. But it also signalled the first shot in the Black September war which drove the Palestipians from Jordan.

in a rare interview with a Western reporter, Dr. Habash, the American university educated pediatrician who became one of Israel's most wanted men, explained why he adopted the hijacking tactic and why he later disavowed such activities after 1972. Dr. Habash also set forth his policies on the United States, Iran, Jordan, Camp David and other Palestinian groups in the PLO as the Palestinian commando war enters its fourth decade. The interview took place

Friday in Damascus, where Habash is attending the 14th ession of the Palestine Nation 12! Council, often called the parliament-in-exile of the Paestine Liberation Organizaion (PLO).

Habash says the motive for he hijackings stemmed from he creation of Israel, "when we were dismissed like sheep from our homes and told to ive in tents." initially, he said, the Pales-

Yet Manya, along with four other chiefs of the mysteryshrouded Bazaar Merchants Association, commands enough emotional and commercial resources to mobilize the nation's Shifte leaders, to put thousands of riotous demonstrators quickly into the streets and, perhaps, to determine the fate of the Iranian nation.

To understand his power base and its influence on the crisis in Iran, according to a Farsi-speaking American political scientist here, one must recognize the three basic institutions that historically have held the country together.

First was the monarchy, which commanded the military and the national treasury, including its oil revenues. Second was the Muslim faith. espoused by more than nine out of 10 iranians. And third was the bazaar, he commercial and financial core of every Iranian city, which until recently handled a third of the nation's imports, most of its non-petroleum exports and two-thirds of its retail trade. Virtually every bazaar in iran has been closed by order of Manya and his four colleagues through most of the days of political, social and economic chaos that followed flery demonstrations throughout the country in early November.

Mobs of luti (roughly translated from Farsi as hooigans) have been recruited almost daily from the bazaar to join students demonstrating on the streets. Tens of millions of dollars have poured from the bazaar to religious leaders who, in order to continue their implacable opposition to Shah required vast sums to provide food, clothing and shelter for the people who have joined the demonstrations.

According to the political scientist, who asked not to be identified because he must remain anonymous in order to continue his research in Iran. he bazaar, with its mysterious leadership and complex organization structure, has orchestrated and financed most of the evolution against the Pahlavi dynasty. To Western eyes, accustomed to the commercial and financial world of multinational corpodustries, the peculiarly Oriental

The very word bazaar conjures images of murky alleys populated by small shopkeepers with avaricious eyes on every passing pocketbook. People like them have been favorite minor characters in dozens of spy thrillers and mys-ery films.

the setting, especially in the capital city of Tehran, reinforces the fictional image. Once a mud-walled tracking post around which lehran sprung up less than two centuries ago, the bazaar is now 10 square kilometers in size: Almost entirely roofed over, it contains in its labyrinth of unmapped streets, alleys and passageways an estimated 60,000 shops that in normal times have delighted tourists shopping for bargains in exotic Persian rugs and arti-

To outward appearances, the bazaariha, as the merchants and their families are called. also fit the fictional image. Most look and act like humble shopkeepers, living handto-mouth in dimly lit storefronts. They are linked - one shop to another, one street to another and one city to another — by centuries-old family, ethnic, tribal, religious and commercial ties. In times of crisis these ties bring forth a kind of unity inconceivable to even the most efficient chamber of commerce. But aside from those powerful links, the fictional image of the bazaariha is largely false.

Manya, for example, is a bazaar shoemaker, but his shoe factories employ hundreds of workers and his multi-milliondollar industrial holdings also include an electric appliance manufacturing company. His four fellow-leaders of the Tehran bazzar, all of whom try to keep their personal identities secret from outsiders, also are wealthy men.

One reportedly is a steel and automobile parts importer, another a Persian carpet exporter, another a major agricultural commodities dealer who, before a price control crackdown by the Shah's government two years ago, made millions on wheat and meat imports after manipulating local merkets to drive prices up.
The wealth of the bazaar is not held exclusively by the leaders. One relatively minor and more typical bazaar merchant, for example, is Mostaba Araghcy, a rug salesman whose Geneva, London and Denver, does millions of dollars worth of business each year and whose warehouse behind what

"shop" maintains a steady $2 million inventory.

With so much at stake, why did these wealthy bazaariha turn against the monarchy and. as Manya said in a rare but cryptic interview, insist "100 per cent" that the Shah leave?

The reasons were both commercial and religious. At their core were what the bazaariha believed to be two major mistakes committed by the Shah and his recent governments.

One was against the bazaariha themselves and the other against religion, which most of the bazaariha profess and to which they historically have given vast sums of money to augment an annual subsidy provided to the nation's mosques by the government.

To take the religious mistake first: until 1977, the Shah's government annually appropriated $80 million to be given to the Ayatollahs of Iran for distribution as they wished. Another several million dollars came from the bazaariha on a volumuary basis.

Last year, the government, facing a tight, deficit budget brought about the Shah's overambitious industrialization and modernization plans, cut its share of the contribution to $30

Religious leaders already were upset by land retorm measures in the 1960s and 1970s that had deprived the mosques of much of their added revenue and by modernization measures such as coeducation, legalized abortion and family laws that flouted ancient Islamic customs concerning marriage and the rights of women. But now they were furious. They took their complaints to the bazaariha, who had been the staunchest supporters of the faith and had the economic power to act.

Their complaints fell on fertile ears, because the bazzariha were furious with the government, too. In the pell-mell rush to modernize and industralize, the Shah and his government had bypassed the bazaar. As billions of dollars in oil revenue financed huge .new government projects, palace favorites made the deals for the major items, such as steel and cement imports.

State-run credit institutions took over the financing that the money-lenders of the bazaar once handled routinely. Semi-MODODOLISTIC state industries in caviar, textiles and agricultural commodities, for example - cut drastically into bazzar

Altogether, it was more than the bazaariha could take. So they acted, by encouraging the ayatoliahs and the mullahs of mosques throughout Iran to rise against the Shah.

Communication from the bazaars to mesques throughout the nation is said to be equally tapid. Tape recordings of calls to strike by the exiled Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the leading and most implacable religious opponent of the Shah, are said to move out of the bazaar and on to the loudspeakers of most of the nation's mosques in a matter of hours.

Moreover, the bazaanha are believed to exercise significant influence among professionals connections. In many cases, the merchants' sons, wealthy by birth, have left the bazaar for their education and have moved into places of prominence in law, medicine, the universities According to those who have and the government bureaucra-

Israelis shun visits to the Arab West Bank

TEL AVIV — The sight of an Israeli family driving through the occupied West Bank on a leisurely outing is becoming increasingly rare as tensions rise among Palestinians and Israelis over the up-anddown negotiations for peace between Israel and Egypt.

Along the broad, tree-lined streets of Jericho, whose colorful marketplaces once were crowded with Israelis on a warm Saturday afternoon, it is unusual to see an Israeli-owned car with its distinctive yellow license tag.

The same is true in the bustling, traffic-clogged streets of the Arab town of Ramallah, used to venture for bargain prices on clothing and fresh produce.

The pebble beaches of the Dead Sea, which used to be packed with Israelis, are much less crowded now. Israelis still go there to smear their bodies with the black, sulphide rich mud and float languidly in the bouyant water, but more often than not they are outnumbered by Arabs and forcign tourists.

The trend of Israelis to stay away from the West Bank. which has evolved gradually over the last several years but accelerated since the Camp David summit conference, is fear, uncertainty over the fundamental sociological differences that have been magnified by the tension that has accompanied the terbuient peace negotiations.

Dani Schahal, the military governor's staff officer for West Bank tourism, said another reason is that the novelty has worn off for Israelis in the 11 years since the area was seized from Jordan.

Some West Bank occupation authorities say they are concerned because the presence of Israeli civilians in the occupied area - rather than causing security problems — actually makes the job of maintaining order easier.

The ideal of Israelis and Arabs peacefully mingling and shopping together in Arab towns creates a stable atmosohere, the anthonities say, that is preferable to the appearance of a Jewish civilian in an exclusively Arab neighborhood. Israeli political officials, on the other hand, say they are concerned because the key to the success of Prime Minister Menahem Begin's West Bank autonomy proposal is the peaceful coexistence of Arabs and Israelis, and a constant movement of the two groups hetween Israel and the occupied territories. Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan made that point last September, saying: "I am not a foreigner on the West Bank, and I didn't want to be considered a foreigner. I should always have a right to take my car and my grandchildren and go to Jericho if I want."

Right now, the flow seems to be a one-way street. Nearly half the West Bank's 90,000 Palestinian workers hold jobs in Karael, even if they are jobs that many Israelis have come to shun — day labor. unskilled construction work and the like.

However, in the other direction, there normally are no such obstacles.

The decline in Israeli visitors to Arab towns has its exceptions. The markets and antique shops of Bethlehem and nearby Best Jala, near Jerusalem, are still crowded with Israeli tourists on Saturdays.

Also, there are six Jewish settlements within a 30-km radius of Jerusalem, accounting for some of the Israeli traffic in these towns.

Hebron, with its tomb of the patriarchs that is holy to Jews and Muslims, is still one of the top attractions to Israclis, although they tend to visit the ancient tomb and then leave, rather than linger in the Arab town.

Some Israeli businessmer with interests on the West Bank say privately that they prefer to bring their Palestiman clients to Tel Aviv, rather than make regular visits to the West Bank - not so much out of fear of imminent danger as just a growing discomfort

Early in 1978, Thryssen A.G. of West Germany, the biggest steel producer in that country, paid $238 million for the Budd Company, a manufacturer of automobile part and possibly best known for building many of New York City's more modern subway cars.

> Another West German company, Bayer A.G., bought Miles Laboratories, a pharmaceutical manufacturer, in 1978, paying more than $216 mallion. In 1977 Nestle Alimentana of Switzerland announced plans to build a $100 million coffee processing plant in Virginia, Agra-Gevaert of Belgium and West Germany paid $35.2 miltion for X-ray manufacturing and distributing facilities it bought from Ipco Hospital Supply Corporation, and Hoffmann-LaRoche of Switzerland announced an outlay of $113 million to build a pharmaceu-

"A lot of companies are just getting to the size where they can handle the American market," he says. "A lot of these companies have grown with the Common Market, to where they have over $100 mation in sales and they can bogin to think about expanding to the United States.

There are other reasons, too. The United States generally offers a wider range of managerial options than other countries. In many countries, you have to get government permission just to cut your work force. N ♥ Q 6 3 0 10 9 8 ↑ AK863 2. You are declarer with the same hand at Three Notrump, but this time, when you play the king of spades, South wins with the ace and returns the ten. How would you play the Is notrump you usually try to develop tricks in your longest suit (in the present case, cinbs), but you can't afford to do that in all cases.

Thus, the right suit to play here is diamonds, not clubs. Lead the ten of diamonds at trick two and finesse. Even if the ten loses to the king, you will be left with nine tricks consisting of one spade, three hearts, three diamonds and two clubs. North can't profitably lead a spade, and on come home free and clear atever else be leads. If South has the king of diamonds, you make at least ten tricks by repeating the turned out that South had the guarded queen, you could go down with a spade return through your queen.

impletely if South wins with the ace of spades and returns the ten. Instead of South being the player you're afraid to have on lead, North becomes the player you fear most. Be presimably has the spade length (he probably has five spades) and must be prevented from cashing them after they are establish Accordingly, you should duck the ten of spades return and win the next spade with the queen. Now you lead the jack of clubs and finesse. You don't mind losing the trick to South because his fangs have aiready been drawn.

Suppose South wins with the queen of clubs and returns a diamond. You rise with the ace and run like a bunny with nine tricks. Don't try to be a hero by taking a diamond finesse. You might wake up in a hospital, badly bruise Of course, if and when South wins with the queen of chubs. he may have a spade to return. You don't worry about this because in that case, the spades are divided 4-4 and you defection of an East German state security officer with important documents and a lightning round-up of suspected spies tas given West Germany's battle against Communist subversion a boost.

But official satisfaction with the operation was dampened somewhat Sunday by the news that one of the detained suspects had managed to elude tris guard in bad weather Saturday night and escaped. But official sources said four other suspects were in custody. Federal Prosecutor Kurt Rebmann moved tast after the defector, a first beutenant in the East German State Security Ministry, crossed into West Berlin with his wife and child on Thursday night.

The defector, whose identity has been withheld, brought with him what officials described as important documents which enabled them to pounce on the suspects.

The Bonn government estimated last year that up to 10,000 East German spies were active in West Germany.

Informed sources in West Berlin, noting the speed of the operation, said the East German officer had been a double

The defector was held at the airport by the French military authorities, apparently because he did not have the right papers, the sources said. United States intelligence officials are also said to have entered the picture in West

E. Germans, in turn, claim NATO defection

BERLIN, Jan. 21 (UPI) -A NATO lieutenant has defected to East Germany with important files and documents, the East German news service ADN said Sunday, ADN said the officer specialized in intelligence work and had asked for asylum in East Germany.

It said only that he was a "NATO lieutenant," and did not disclose his nationality.

"For many years he was on many's counter intelligence in Pullach, near Munich. Officials said the defector had worked in the "Main De-operation staffs of various NATO intelligence departments, "the agency said.

"He came with important files and documents" ADN said. "The competent authorities of the German Democratic Republic are now examining his asylum request."

ADN gave no details. It did not say when the officer had defected.

Western diplomats noted the ADN statement was transmitted after West German justice authorities reported the defection of an East German secret police lieutenant colonel, who disclosed the names of alleged Eastern spies.

East German State Security Service's foreign arm.

The unusual speed of the response of the Federal Prosecutor's Office in Karlsruhe fuelled speculation that it was part of a larger secret service

Security authorities took only one day to check the defector's credentials and the documents he brought with him. The prosecutor's office took the rare step of calling in the press to announce imminent arrests, apparently to unsettle Communist agents in the Federal Republic.

The Federal Criminal Office in Wiesbaden, reporting the escape of the suspect Saturday night named him as Reiner Fuelle, a 40-year-old economist born in Ztickau, East Germany, and now living near Karlsrube.

They said he was suspected of supplying material from his sphere of work to the East German Ministry of State Security. Police sources said he worked at the Karisruhe Nuclear Research Center.

The criminal office said in a statement the man escaped from a car taking him to a pre-trial detention center Saturday night from the Federal Supreme Court, where he had been interrogated and an arrest

Indian bank employees agree to end disruption

NEW DELHI, Jan. 21 (AP) - Indian bank employees, whose month of strikes and slowdowns have retarded the country's commerce, agreed on Sunday to resume negotiations on wages and other demands, the government announced

An agreement to resume both normal banking operations and the wage talks that collapsed last Thursday was announced after direct intervention by two members of the cabinet.

Two persons have been shot dead by police and hundreds injured or arrested in civil disturbances, and millions of checks and payments have been delayed as a result of nationwide strikes and work to rule agitation at banks since the last week of December. A Finance Ministry statement said the three unions representing half a million bank empolyees and officers agreed to resume normal work Monday and to enter negotiations with the mostly nationalized banks one week later.

A complete work stoppage threatened for Feb. 2 was cancelled, the announcement said.

The announcement came after a series of talks Sunday between Finance Minister H.M. Patel and Labor Minister Ravindra Varma, the unions and the Bank Asso-
